Introducing

Summer Blossom

A collection for all those late summer lovers, garden-addicts, flower-admirers and nature-seekers.

And even if you don't find yourself in here, chances are high you know someone who would love a bit of summer in bloom in their home.

Why did I create this collection?

Because I'm a nature-seeker, flower-admirer and late summer lover. I have thousands of pictures of flowers from our garden, of nature in late summer. I love when the light turns more golden, though the sun sets late. When it smells earthy and dry, or wet, after a fall of rain. The cool shades of the forest, green leaves everywhere, some sunbeams here and there.

However, as you might have noticed, I only painted wild flowers. They are often overlooked, tiny or fragile. They can't be compared to the immenseness of many garden flowers. Having their own beauty, they belong to late summer in the field and in the forest. The attentive wanderer might notice them, but the busy wanderer will probably not.

So these paintings, little and fragile, ask you to come closer, be attentive without your mind racing here and there, because then you might overlook them and their details. Come closer and be right in this moment. You, the painting and late summer.

Here comes...
